Lindsay Wolter, J.D., Attorney. You have to be a jack of all trades to maintain a solo practice in small town Alaska. In 2012, Lindsay took over an existing Homer law practice and has been practicing estate planning, probate, real estate, corporate formation, adoptions, landlord/tenant matters, and so on. Lindsay graduated Yale in 2000 and completed law school at the University of Miami in 2003.

On August 7th of this year, Lindsay had her first son, Ole, (pronounced Oh-lee). She and her husband, Jedd, are enjoying the resulting life changes. Lindsay also volunteers with Big Brothers Big Sisters of Alaska, chairs the Kachemak Bay State Park Citizens Advisory Board, sits on the Homer Foundation Board of Trustees, and also serves on the Ageya Wilderness Center board.

Harry Need, MPA '13, CFRE. Harry started in the trenches at the University of Alaska Anchorage and has been helping Alaska donors meet their objectives for nearly ten years. In his current role as Director of Gift Planning with the UA Foundation, he works with people who are interested in making a lasting legacy gift in support of higher education by including the University of Alaska in their estate plans. While there can be substantial financial benefits from making a planned gift, such as avoidance of estate tax, capital gains tax avoidance, or life income payments, most donors give because they believe in the mission and purpose of the University of Alaska. Donors can choose how their gift will be used and often wish to support a specific school or type of student.

This event made possible through the support of the
UA Foundation, the Homer Foundation, and KBBI.
